Lionel Tertis

The retirement of a famous musical performer is an event which must be expected, and one which can normally be accepted with philosophic regret. It is difficult, however, to reconcile oneself to the fact that Lionel Tertis will never play again, and it is no exaggeration to state that the news of his irrevocable decision to retire was received with something amounting to dismay. To us of the R.A.M., where, to feelings of admiration for a superb artist is added pride in an alumnus of outstanding distinction, the shock came with especial force; the memory of his visit during "Review Week" in December last was still vivid. Who, among the audience which crowded Duke's Hall on that occasion, could have imagined that this marvellous, incomparable tone would never again be heard in the place which, we like to feel, Tertis regards as his musical home? Neither then, nor at his very last appearance (at the B.B.C. Symphony Concert on February 24th) could the most exacting critic detect any sign of failing technical powers: indeed, the general opinion was that he had never played more finely. The fact, which we now know, that, even then, he had to contend with severe physical disability, can only deepen our profound sense of admiration and gratitude.

This is not the occasion for enumerating Tertis's achievements for his well-loved instrument and for music in general. He is, happily, still with us, and it is safe to assume that the fruits of his experience and the influence of his personality will still be placed at the disposal of the art he has so nobly served. In this Magazine, however, it may be permissible to mention his long association with the R.A.M., as student, professor of the Viola, and more recently, as Director of the Ensemble Class, as well as the contributions which numerous Academy composers have been privileged to make to that repertoire of Viola music which Tertis has gradually built up, and in which he has taken an especial pride.

Tertis has played an important part in securing that recognition of our native art which foreign nations have been so reluctant to concede. During his tours on the Continent and in America he has compelled the admission that British music and musicians are a force to be reckoned with. The writer of these notes has had many opportunities of observing the amazement with which foreign musicians have realised that such a phenomenal artist hailed from these "unmusical" shores. On such occasions, comparisons with Kreisler and Casals would inevitably be made, and we Academicians are immensely proud to feel that one of the greatest string-players of our time is "one of us."

We desire to offer to our distinguished friend sincere wishes for much happiness in his retirement, together with a renewed assurance of our gratitude and affection.

The Dvořák Chamber Music Works

This series of concerts, presenting the complete chamber music works of Dvořák in chronological order, was continued upon successive Monday afternoons during the Lent Term, and reached its conclusion in a supplementary concert on Wednesday, March 17th. Coming as it did in succession to the series of Haydn, Beethoven, Brahms and Schubert, this course of recitals was one whose educational value to all students and music-lovers, performers and hearers alike, it is impossible to over-estimate.

The printed notes in the programme, enabling each work performed to be compared chronologically with other works of the composer, were of great assistance towards historical perspective and in tracing his growth in technique and style.

That such a formidable task can be carried out so successfully, relying only upon the resources of the ensemble class during one term—and that in spite of prevailing epidemics, necessitating deputies upon occasions—reflects the highest credit upon all, and especially upon Mr. Herbert Withers, whose guidance has promoted such efficiency and artistry.

At the final concert the Principal spoke of a message he had received from Prague voicing gratitude for the honour in which the R.A.M. had held Anton Dvořák, and mentioning that the chamber music series just finished would be commemorated in the forthcoming exhibition there.

The following works were performed during the series of concerts:—

Choral Concert, February 17

In days when so many independent choirs purchase their continuity of existence only at the price of over-repetition of well-known and popular works, it is pleasant to record such an interesting programme as was presented on this occasion. Mr. B. J. Dale's "Before the paling of the stars"—apart from its intrinsic beauty and dignity of treatment—has a value for us in that it is a representative example of the period during which English Choral Music was emancipating itself from the shackles of two traditions under which it had laboured too long. Dr. George Dyson's "The Canterbury Pilgrims"—an admirable contrast—represents a later stage in the same progress in its freedom from conventions, its vitality, and its faithfulness to the rhythm and spirit of its text. Both Choir and Orchestra, under Mr. Ernest Read's alert and experienced direction, exhibited that happy responsiveness which follows congenial work and adequate preparation.

Review Week, Lent Term, 1937

The Lent Term "Review Week" has to be carried through under the shadow of that time-honoured event, the Elements Examination, as a consequence of which the programme has to be of rather more modest dimensions than that of the corresponding December Week. Seven Lectures were given, which may conveniently be grouped in three categories. Dr. Armstrong Gibbs ("Voice and Verse") and Miss Lucille Wallace ("The Harpsichord Family") approached their subjects from the historical angle. The former's survey of the varying degrees of respect (or disrespect) which composers of vocal music have shown to the words of their choice was illustrated by examples ranging from Dowland to Vaughan Williams and the Lecturer himself, the performances of which were undertaken by students of the Academy with marked success. Miss Wallace's account of the origins and developments of the Pianoforte's forerunners was both comprehensive and concise, and no slur on her abilities as Lecturer is implied when it is said that the chief delight of the audience lay in her exquisite performance of numerous illustrations. For the majority of these a fine two-manual harpsichord was used, but the first Prelude and Fugue of the "48" were played upon a Clavichord. It was instructive to compare our modern pianistic conception of Bach with this performance on the instrument of his own choice. Scarcely audible as, at times, it was, one was yet able to appreciate the amazingly delicate shades of expression and the unusual intimacy of the part-playing.

Mr. Eric Blom ("Operatic Development") and Mr. Walter de la Mare ("The Meaning of Poetry") dealt with their respective subjects in a fundamental way which took their listeners into the deeper waters of philosophy and psychology. Each of these Lectures was a closely reasoned argument, demanding, and repaying, the most concentrated attention.

The contributions of Mr. Bernard Shore ("The Orchestra from Inside"), Dr. Whittaker ("Choral Conducting") and Mr. Percy Heming ("Singing as a Profession") were practical talks of a most stimulating and helpful type. Each of these speakers, drawing upon the valuable store of his personal experience, gave an address packed full of sound advice and seasoned with humorous touches which were much to the taste of the appreciative audience.

In recording our sense of gratitude to the distinguished Lecturers of this "Review Week," who spared no pains in giving us of their best, regret must be expressed that audibility was sometimes far from perfect. It is hoped that this difficulty may be remedied before another "Review Week" takes place.

R.A.M. New Music Society, March 4

At this Invitation Concert of Modern Chamber Music were performed a Sonata for Pianoforte, op. 12 by Shostakowitsch (Gordon Felmingham), Duo for Violin and Viola by Arnold Cooke (David Carl Taylor and Watson Forbes), Serenade en la for Pianoforte by Stravinsky (Gordon Felmingham), Ballade for Viola and Pianoforte by William Alwyn (Watson Forbes and Myers Foggin), and a Quartet for Strings by Rosetta Carter (Edward Silverman, William Waterhouse, Douglas Thomson and Peter Beaven). Of these compositions Mr. Alwyn's Ballade gave the greatest pleasure to the majority among a large and interested audience.

Concert of String Orchestra, March 16

The second Symphony of William Boyce (arr.: Lambert); a Concerto in B minor by Handel (arranged from the Sonata for two flutes and Continuo by Norman Demuth) Solo Violins, Robert Masters and William Waterhouse; two movements of Mozart's Serenade in G "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; and Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, Edward Silverman and Olive Zorian, comprised an interesting and well executed programme given by the orchestra of fifty string players on March 16th. Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell was the conductor.

Students' Chamber Concert, March 18

This concert opened with a satisfying performance of two movements of Schubert's "Trout" Quintet, played by Frank Thomas, Mary George, Edna Elphick, Aubrey Appleton and Margaret Fairfax, and later in the programme Olive Zorian and Iris Greep played movements of Brahms' Sonata in A, op. 100 for violin and pianoforte. Solo keyboard music was represented by four Chopin Studies (Eunice Gardner) and Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Capriccioso which received nice treatment at the hands of Jean Inglis. Arnold Bax's Sonata in E (Patrick Piggott and Anne Hathway Jones), and two of Bach's Choral Preludes (arr. Vivian Langrish) played by Beryl Rogers and Oliver Liddell afforded interest both in performance and in treatment of two pianofortes. Vera Healy sang three of Holst's Vedic Hymns with imagination and apt tone-colour, and a Purcell duet for two Basses (Trevor Anthony and Scott-Joynt) provided something of novelty. Three songs with string-quartet accompaniment by Goossens were sung by Muriel Burnett and the pianoforte accompanists were Stella Goodyer and Frank Thomas.

Students' Orchestral Concert, March 19

At the concert given at Queen's Hall under Sir Henry J. Wood's direction on March 19th, such contrasted works as Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture and the Third Symphony of Sibelius were a sufficient demonstration of the standard which the orchestra has attained and of its versatility. A vigorous performance of Stanford's Irish Rhapsody also was obtained under the guidance of W. Cox-Ife, a student-conductor. Movements of Haydn's Violoncello in D (Joyce Cohen) and Brahms' Pianoforte Concerto in D minor (Olive Cloke) bore witness to dexterity of soloists and orchestral players alike. Handel's "Let the bright seraphim" sung by Dorothy Langmaid with trumpet obbligato by Sidney Ellison, and the Prologue to "I Pagliacci"—(Leoncavallo) sung by Roderick Jones, completed the programme.

Chamber Concerts of Students' Compositions

These two concerts, devoted, as in former years, to students' compositions performed by a specially engaged quartet of ex-student players, with the assistance of other instrumentalists under the direction of Mr. Herbert Withers, gave further evidence of the wealth of ability, both executive and creative, which the Academy possesses in its students.

Coronation Concert, May 21

During the celebrations attendant upon the Coronation of His Majesty King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, the Royal Academy of Music took opportunity to pay a loyal tribute of its art by a concert given at Queen's Hall on Friday, May 21st.

A large and distinguished audience had assembled when the National Anthem heralded the arrival of H.R.H. Princess Alice and the Earl of Athlone, who were received by the Chairman of the Committee of Management and Mrs. Agnew and by the Principal and Mrs. Marchant.

At times of national festival it is noticeable that the pièce d'occasion whose interest is chiefly historical sometimes finds resuscitation for reasons other than intrinsic musical worth. On this occasion, however, the programme chosen had a threefold ground of appeal: that of British Music: of Academy origin, (the works of six ex-students finding place) and that of the events lately filling public thought.

After one of Purcell's Trumpet Tunes arranged for brass and organ by Sir Henry J. Wood, the choir and orchestra opened the programme with a stirring performance of Blest Pair of Sirens, than which, either in respect of the grandeur of Milton's verse or the nobility of Parry's music, a more fitting work could hardly be found. Arnold Bax's Overture to Adventure received its first London hearing, having been dedicated to Richard Austin and his Bournemouth orchestra, who gave it its first performance there early in the present year. It proved to be concise, straightforward in design, and rich in material and colour; in fact, the sort of work for which there is always a hearty welcome. The enthusiasm which greeted the appearance of the composer on the platform was equally in regard to this fine work as to the fact of the inclusion of his name among the new Knights in the Coronation Honours List. Two familiar songs of Purcell, with the accompaniments most felicitously scored by the hand of someone whose name was unmentioned in the programme, were sung with great art by May Blyth, and there followed Beethoven's Concerto in G played by Myra Hess. The rapt attention of the whole audience and the acclamations which greeted her appearances upon the platform were a tribute to the consummate art of her performance and an expression of warm welcome on her recent return to this country.

Part Two began with Handel's Anthem, written for the Coronation of King George II in 1727, The King shall rejoice, and contained also typical movements from orchestral suites by Sir Alexander Mackenzie and Sir Edward German and an Aria from Sullivan's Ivanhoe sung by Arthur Fear. The programme concluded with the Principal's Festival Te Deum, (during which the audience stood), composed for the Service of Thanksgiving held at St. Paul's Cathedral on the occasion of the Silver Jubilee of King George V. Dr. Marchant, who conducted the work, had orchestrated the organ accompaniment specially for this concert, thereby successfully adapting for concert use the necessarily liturgical qualities inherent in its original purpose.

The choir, trained by Mr. Ernest Read, numbered 181 voices and the orchestra 135 players, and the whole concert (except one item mentioned) was conducted by Sir Henry J. Wood, to whose guidance and training, as on so many other occasions, the R.A.M. is indebted for the magnificent work done by its orchestra.

Drama

Whatever may be our opinion of the message and warning of H. G. Wells's Things to Come, we shall all agree that enterprise and courage were shown abundantly by Miss Ena Grossmith in adapting the scenes from the film and in directing the Dramatic Class in their stage presentation. The performances took place in the Duke's Hall, on March 8th and 9th. There was a cast of over sixty performers and stage management of the numerous scenes comprising the three "Periods" was in the hands of Marie Slocombe, Joyce Robinson, Honor Meikle, Jean Bone and Doreen Davenport.

The music was arranged by its composer, Arthur Bliss, from that written for the film, and the orchestra was conducted by Myers Fogglin.

Students' Chamber Concert, May 27

Mozart's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (K 478), with which this concert opened, is a work of such satisfying qualities of structural integrity and evergreen freshness of material that players and hearers, students and savants all concur in its appreciation. Its performance by Frank Thomas, William Waterhouse, Aubrey Appleton and Mary Stuart Harding was such that the recent award of a prize to this ensemble for the same achievement occasions no surprise. Two movements of Elgar's Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte (Mary George and Ross Pratt) gave the players opportunity to exhibit a fusion and unity not always so apparent in performances of this work. A very happy combination was attained in a movement of Beethoven's Septet by Bertha Pells, Josephine Euler, Hilda Howitson, John Clapham, Margaret Jacob, Mary Hunt and Dennis Brain, and a repetition of a MS. Caprice for Flute, Clarinet and Pianoforte by Geraldine Thomson, heard at the concert of Students' Compositions on April 29th, was welcome. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue (Beryl Rogers) and Brahms' Ballade in D (Rosalie Inskip) worthily represented pianoforte music, and Vivian Joseph displayed a very fine tone and interpretative qualities in a group of violoncello pieces. It was refreshing to hear again some of Parry's songs so well sung by Vera Rae-Stevens, and other vocal items included interesting songs of Mahler, sung by Harold Child, two Rachmaninoff songs (Alison Reid) and some fine singing by Tom Williams in examples of Stanford and John Ireland. Accompaniments were ably played by Stella Goodger, Phyllis Spurr and Ross Pratt.

The Cobbett Free Lending Library of British Chamber Music.

Not least in usefulness among the many benefactions of the late Mr. W. W. Cobbett to the cause of music is his Library of British Chamber Music. Comprising representative examples from the 16th century down to the present day, this Library was first placed in the charge of the Society of Women Musicians in 1920 and four years later presented to them. Later, from time to time, he made further gifts of music and at his death bequeathed a sum of money for the upkeep of the Library.

The Catalogue (including recent additions), may now be seen at the R.A.M., and additional copies, with particulars as to conditions of borrowing, may be obtained from the Secretary of the Society of Women Musicians, Miss Rachel Fell, L.R.A.M., 74 Grosvenor Street, London, W.1.

Dinner to Lionel Tertis, F.R.A.M.

A Dinner-party, given on June 13th in honour of Lionel Tertis upon his retirement, was attended by a very large number of his friends and admirers in all departments of musical activity. Sir Hugh Allen read messages of appreciation and affection from many eminent musicians including Kreisler, Schnabel and Ansermet, and among the numerous speakers paying tribute to Mr. Tertis as musician, teacher and man were Sir Thomas Beecham, Dr. Vaughan Williams, Eugene Goossens, Bernard Shore and William Murdoch.

Mr. Tertis, replying, recounted the unfortunate reasons which had led him, after much painful thought and for the sake of his art, to come to a decision at once difficult and irrevocable. He added that although he did not allow himself any pity, he would permit himself the joy of looking upon that night's gathering as the seal of recognition of the viola as a solo instrument.

The John B. McEwen Prize

To perpetuate the memory of the work of Sir John McEwen as Principal, an anonymous donor has endowed an annual prize at the R.A.M. The prize, which will be called the John B. McEwen Prize, will be offered in the mid-summer term for string quartette playing. The work to be prepared this year is Sir John's string quartette Threnody.

Threlfall Scholarship

Mrs. Lydia Tennant Threlfall, who died on January 19th, left £1,000 to the R.A.M. for a Scholarship in memory of her husband who was Chairman of the Committee of Management from 1887 until his death in 1907. She bequeathed a further £500 towards the building fund of the proposed theatre.

Henry Beauchamp, Hon. R.A.M.

Mr. Beauchamp's recent resignation of his work at the R.A.M. will call forth good wishes from his many friends and also from among a large number of ex-students. For thirty years past, his distinguished activities as Professor of Singing and for some years as Director of the Operatic Class had made their influence felt in a very wide circle.

Indian Music at the R.A.M.

The Mysore Palace Musicians.

It happens all too rarely that students of music in England get an opportunity of hearing an authoritative exposition of the delicate and subtly beautiful music of India ; and the Royal Academy of Music may account itself very fortunate in receiving a visit from His Highness the Uva Rajah of Mysore, who brought with him two of his Palace musicians. His Highness is a devoted lover of music, and his Palace Musicians are said to be the best in India. He is keenly anxious, moreover, that the artistic achievements of his own country should be better known and appreciated here in England, and it is to this enthusiasm of his that the afternoon's music was due.

The crowded audience listened spell-bound to performances in various Ragas by Abdul Rahman Beg Shahzade (sitar) and D. Seshiah (thabla), musicians whose astonishing virtuosity was only excelled by their consummate artistry ; and Dr. Arnold Bake, a well-known authority on this little-known subject, elucidated the various items with a few brief but most helpful remarks. At the end of the proceedings the Principal (Dr. Stanley Marchant) warmly thanked His Highness for his kindness ; and the enthusiastic applause showed that the audience appreciated this no less than the remarkable musical performance to which they had been privileged to listen.

Mrs. Tobias Matthay

April 15, 1937

We deeply regret to record in these pages the death of Mrs. Tobias Matthay (Jessie Henderson Kennedy).

Daughter of David Kennedy the Scottish folk-song singer, she entered the R.A.M. as a student in 1891, studying singing under Garcia and elocution under Farren. A little later, through the persuasion of Frederick Corder, Mr. Matthay consented to take her into his class, although the pianoforte was her "second study." A year afterwards she became his wife, and Mr Matthay has stated that that was the turning point of his own career. "She was my inspiration, my helper and adviser in everything all these 44 years."

Although she had intended to become a singer, as were all her family, and was also quite a fine pianist, upon her husband's advice she took up verse-speaking and eventually made a great name for herself as an interpreter of poetry.

A few years later she became a Professor of Elocution at the R.A.M., which post she continued to hold until both she and Mr. Matthay resigned in 1925. Arthritis had in recent years prevented her public appearance, but she and her husband had given a joint B.B.C. recital as recently as in November last. Many friends and admirers during their long career will revere her memory and tender to him a sincere condolence.

R.A.M Club (Students' Branch) Social

A Social was held in the Theatre on May 18th. The guest of honour was Theodore Komisarjevsky, the distinguished producer. Mr. Demuth was kind enough to act as host. Mr. Komisarjevsky's address on the subject of "The Production of Opera" was warmly applauded. There followed a general discussion marked by many interesting questions being asked, which showed the keen interest aroused by the speaker. The evening ended with a dance, the students supplying the necessary music. Those present included Miss Fairbairn, Miss MacLaren, Mr. Bush and Mr. Edward Clark. The success of the evening has encouraged the hope of further Socials.
